Black Velvet Inlays

By PRUNELLA WOOD

A VERY handsome dress is this black silk broadcloth model with pleated front and chevron stripes of black silk velvet, making a two-tone black costume of town elegance.

The velvet panel becomes a collar which may be worn high behind, in the current affectation, and the closing, also part of the panel, consists of black velvet buttons and loops.

The Plastic Age Invades The Home

By ELEANOR ROSS

IT'S all very well to love and treasure beautiful materials, fine silks, wonderful woods, rich leather, exquisite translucent porcelain and such, but for most of us these are almost out of the question, except for family treasures and heirlooms. So we are content with the marvellous man-made fibres and materials, the plastics, even if some folk do sneeringly refer to this as the "plastic age." Well, what of it? Isn't it a treat to have pieces upholstered with what looks for all the world like lovely leather, except that it wipes clean with a flick of the indispensable damp cloth?

Take a look at a recent exhibition of new plastic articles in the American market.

absorb dirt, and to be unaffected by damp, mildew or rust. It seemed to us that such covers offer just about the most pleasing and practical way of preserving periodicals which are handled by many readers.

For the family who occupy a too-small apartment there's a portable clothes dryer that is a marvel. Made from a combination of phenolic plastic and lightweight aluminium, the gadget opens and closes in umbrella-fashion. It is proof against sun and rust, is excellent for delicate lingerie and baby clothes, the six drying arms offering plenty of space. It folds flat for storage in a small drawer or closet corner, and is unaffected by dampness, bleaching chemicals or grease.

Toy Blocks

There are toy blocks filled with zoo and carnival characters. Animated figures perform inside crystal cubes which have the added attraction of being rattles as well as building blocks. It took plastics to give us such holiday delights at sensible prices.

Good for entertaining is a set of three-way trays moulded of phenolic plastic and available in a variety of attractive moulded colours. The lightweight tray has four glasses set in their own non-tipping, drip-proof coasters rimmed around a centre space for potato chips, cookies. When the set is gone the centre of the tray becomes a "king size" tray which can remain on the table until the party is over. Easy to use, the tray can be stored away without damaging its attractive surface. It is moulded of a non-sticking rubber legs which help prevent table rings.

For Dentists

Useful for a doctor or dentist is a set for repairing covers of transparent plastic rigid sheeting that are made as thin as gum or as tough as any kind of cover. The plastic is sealed to the flexible plastic backs. The covers are mounted not to peel, flay or

POCKET NOVELTY

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

Four envelope pockets placed slantwise on the bodice and at the hips lend interest to this lovely wool dress. It is the sort of thing that carries a woman unobtrusively yet very smartly through an active day. The fabric is a tissue thin wool in navy blue, nice on its own or under a coat. The navy suede belt has a gilt buckle. The high neckline is notched at the centre. A fully flared skirt completes the detail.

Quarrel

By C. C. MYERS, Ph.D.

CHILDREN like to quarrel. It is an impartial observer seems very trivial even absurd. The sources of quarrels between children of the same family fall pretty generally into two large groups: ownership of property and privileges or assigned duties. When there's doubt or overlapping in either group quarrelling almost always ensues.

Few Playthings

Emphasize some individual ownership early. Let the baby have a few playthings of his own, which the older is not allowed to snatch away, the older more things of his very own, which the baby must not touch except on permission of the owner. You will incline to require the older always to give up to the younger. Instead, you should try harder than most mothers do to protect the older child from the barbarism of the baby seeing that the baby does not mean to destroy the older child's things. More often than not in quarrels over possession it's the younger who is the first and fiercest aggressor.

Don't mind toys. Give one child a cart and the other a wagon, thus affording them a motive to exchange toys and play co-operatively.

Don't mind privileges, except with twins. The child right should be allowed to go to bed later than the other and be given other privileges the younger may not have, being older. Also make chore assignments with marked age differences in mind.

But be sure jobs don't overlap. Don't, for example, set Gerald, ten, and Percy, 12, to do the dishes together. Let them take turns. And all required assignments should be definite and unescapable.

STARDOM THROUGH STARVING

By PATRICIA CLARY

TEEN-AGER Tommy Cook is paying a heavy price for stardom. No more double malteds or banana splits. Tommy had lunch with the boss one day. The next day he went on a diet, by command. "He ate a steak," said the bug-eyed producer, Anson Bond. "A full order of macaroni and cheese, a combination salad, a double malted milk and a double order of ice cream. He's supposed to play a half-starved Italian."

Tommy replies that proves he is half-starved.

"Mr. Bond just went mad when he had the bill," he grinned.

Young Cook eats like that all the time, he says. In spite of it, he's a lean, hard-muscled kid with never an ounce of spare fat. He keeps that way playing tennis, a sport in which he has won a few competitive trophies.

Biggest Job Yet

He also has appeared in about 2,000 radio broadcasts and about 20 motion pictures. Bond gave him his biggest job yet as a homeless Italian street waif in "The Homeless Years."

Even if Cook's diet doesn't put any fat on him, Bond declared, he wanted him to ease off. Lean rations from now on, and no second helpings or rich desserts.

"It isn't your weight," he said. "You've got to feel hungry to look hungry. A boy can't have a real hungry gleam in his eyes when he polishes off meals like you do."

The price is high, Cook figures, but he's willing to pay it. The role is a real starring part, and, he wants to be absolutely right for it.

"I'm sure I'll be right in one way," he said. "I know darn well I'll be hungry."—United Press.

"Problem" Skin Needs Care

If you have such a sensitive skin that you can't even use soap, give it a light massage when you cleanse it with cream, advises Virginia Gray of the Silver Screen.

By HELEN FOLLETT

RARELY is a skin so sensitive as to be irritated by the use of a bland soap, yet it does happen now and then. Such a complexion requires the most delicate treatment. After the washing and an application of a nourishing cream, pat with the finger tips with regular, gentle, rhythmic movements until the flesh takes on a rosy glow.

Anything that stimulates the blood stream is beneficial, and light massage is likely to revitalize the functions of the sebaceous glands that are lagging on the job. Remember if you are a "dry" that skin "on" is as important as the skin "off." Start at the base of the throat, tap and drag as the fingers work upward. Under the chin use the back of the hands, one after another, lightly if the face is thin, more vigorously if there is an indication that a spare chin may be on the way. Sweep along the jaw line from chin tip to ear, from the nose outward to the ear, from the center of the forehead to the temples where it is a good idea to do little circles.

Cup the chin in the palms of your hands and hold them there firmly while you use the finger tips to mould the muscles of the cheeks. With feather-like taps gently press the delicate tissues surrounding the eyes. Let a thin film of cream remain on over night. The flesh will lap it up and rejoice over a cosmetic feast.

All this can be accomplished in five or ten minutes. It is a wonderful means of retaining youthful bloom, insuring against sag and wrinkles. The skin on the facial areas takes a lot of punishment, is flayed by harsh winds, beset with dust. It cannot get along on its own.

Every morning dash on cold water. If pores have become coarse, putting it on with pads of cotton, allowing it to dry.

Have regard for your eating habits. The balanced diet will do much to keep your complexion in fine condition. Lots of fruits and vegetables! Also plenty of milk.

Let's Eat

A Batch Of Cottage Cheese Recipes

I had a nice cottage cheese and fruit plate at a luncheon conference in one of New York's leading hotels. In the centre of a big service plate was a good-sized china ramekin, filled with cottage cheese topped with sautéed cream. At one side were grapefruit and orange sections on lettuce, and on the other pineapple tidbits and sliced peaches. In between on either side were two finger length topped chicken sandwiches. This was garnished with a few ripe cherries.

"That was a complete luncheon, Madame," remarked the Chef. "Did they pass a salad dressing with this?"

"No, it wasn't needed; the cottage cheese and sautéed cream were used instead."

French Dish

"Have you ever eaten a cottage cheese and potato pie?" asked the Chef. "It is an old fashioned French dish. You line a deep pie plate with pie pastry. Then you fill with the cottage cheese mixture and bake in a moderate oven about 45 minutes. When this is served it can be the main dish for the meal, because the filling calls for 1 pound or 2 cups of cottage cheese, which must be mashed very smooth, 2½ cups of mashed potato, 1 well-beaten egg, ½ cup sour cream, a tablespoon butter, and salt and pepper to taste. You must beat it very much!"

"Does it puff up?" I asked.

"A little, Madame, it is almost like a soufflé."

"When cottage cheese is to be made the basis for a main dish," I remarked, "it saves money to buy it by the pound. But if you need enough to serve just once as a supplementary food or a salad, an eight-ounce package is not only a good buy, but it's one of the most economical sources of our much needed protein. By the way, Chef, how much duck is left over in the refrigerator?"

"Just a little, Madame, enough to make some turnovers."

"Then let's follow what we preach, and to get enough protein, we'll start our meal with a nice cottage cheese salad."

Cheese Ball Salad

Thoroughly mash 8 oz. cottage cheese with 1 oz. Blue or Swiss Gruyere cheese and 1 tsp. minced chives or ¼ tsp. onion salt. Chill and shape into round balls containing 1 tsp. each. Roll in fine-chopped nuts, any kind; or use chopped roasted peanuts. Serve in lettuce nests. Pass tomato French dressing.

Duck or Chicken Turnovers

Pick the meat from the bones of a left-over duck or chicken, and finely chop it. There should be about 1½ c. Add ½ c. fine chopped left-over vegetables, such as peas, string beans, carrots or corn kernels; add enough very thick gravy to barely moisten. Meantime prepare 1 recipe for home-made pie, omitting oil or use piecrust mix. Roll into an oblong shape a scant ¼ in. thick. Cut in 4 in. squares. In the centre of each square put a generous tablespoonful of the duck into chicken mixture. Fold over into triangles and press the edges together with a fork. Make three ½ in. slashes on top to allow the steam to escape. Place on a large oiled pan or cookie sheet, and bake about 25 min. or until well browned, in a hot oven, 400 F. Serve plain, or with gravy or heated cream. Make three ½ in. slashes on top to allow the steam to escape. Chilled Stewed Plums

Select 1½ lbs. firm plums; they should not be over-ripe. Wash and prick each just once with a two-lined kitchen fork. This allows the juice to escape while cooking and prevents the plums from "bursting." Place in a deep sauce pan; add 1 in. stick cinnamon, 2 whole cloves, and ¼ c. granulated sugar dissolved in ¼ c. water or any kind of fruit juice, or use a mixture of grape juice and water. Place on an asbestos mat and simmer very slowly until the plums are tender throughout, about 20 min.

Stomach Trouble Reminder: Observe These Simple Rules

By H. N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

CONTRARY to general opinion, ulcer of the stomach is not difficult to clear up. Ulcers in this location as well as those in the first part of the bowel, can for the most part be readily healed by the use of proper diet, rest, and the giving of an alkaline preparation known as baking soda. The real trick is to keep the ulcer from recurring. This is a more difficult matter and requires the constant observation of the doctor, as well as the patient's adherence to a strict regimen.

The four most common causes for recurrences are improper diet, physical or mental fatigue, emotional disturbances, and infections, especially those of the nose and throat.

Ulcers or even to change their occupations. The diet should contain no foods which may be irritating to the stomach or bowel, and excessively hot or cold foods should also be avoided. Food should be thoroughly chewed and eaten at regular times. It is also suggested that the patient should avoid any stimulating beverages.

Many ulcer patients are also benefited by abstaining from smoking. On the other hand, if such abstinence causes restlessness and nervousness, these may overbalance the advantage of avoiding the use of tobacco.

Prevention of Colds

The prevention of colds is important for these persons since a cold might start a recurrence. The patient must avoid exposure to cold and wet, and should keep out of crowds. It is important, too, that the use of excessive amounts of drugs for treating colds, such as aspirin, should also be avoided.

In some cases operative treatment may be required to control a recurrence of ulcers.

Slight Pain

The patient with ulcer often pays no attention to slight pain in the abdomen or a digestive upset. However, such a person should always remember that these slight disturbances may indicate a beginning recurrence, and that prompt treatment is necessary if a recurrence is to be prevented.

It is often helpful for such patients to have frequent vaca-

FASHION SIDELIGHTS

THE BANDANA-NECKLINE calls a little playdress revived very importantly for the coming season. They are cool-top or shirtwaist-top above-knee dresses meant for spectator sports and lounging at resorts. Several are pleated from shoulders to hem, just like the full length dresses.

THE practical solution to beach pleats is "broomstick-pleated" bloomer bathing suits for their own shoestring wrap-around sashes. The idea is to roll them up, tie them up and let the "laundry pleating" dry right in. These are very effective in clan pla'd cottons. The elastised wool jersey tube-swimsuits which are the signature fashions with this designer, go on in some tricky new versions, brighter new colours like chartreuse.

SPRING greens get a big play—and in a wide range. Newest of the bunch is the green included in their "dried grass colours." Orange tones in degrees, as in a jacquard cotton block-plaid, café-au-lait and putty-tones, fans in nylon, jersey, tooth-check and solid knits; pastels in tissue worsteds—all are colour-news to note. There are a lot of cool-toned checks and stripes based on white in the tissue worsteds, and these deserve special consideration.

RESPONSIBILITY

—Responsibility at a dazzlingly early age...

that's the lure of SUBMARINES

THERE are two great attractions in the submarine service.

The first is the independence which life in a small ship always gives, the feeling of being a member of a small, compact team, all of whom know and trust each other.

And the second is the opportunity offered for accepting responsibility.

There is no other branch of the Navy which offers so much responsibility to its members at so young an age. The first lieutenant of a submarine, on whom the safety of the whole vessel rests when diving and surfacing, may not be more than 21 or 22; the man at the wheel may still be in his teens.

Those in submarines say that there is no more danger in their service than in any other branch of the Navy. But this is denied both by the terrible casualties of the war (far higher than other branches), and the accidents which occur with regrettable regularity in peace-time. The Admiralty recognises the risks involved by granting a rate of pay equivalent only to pilots in the Fleet Air Arm.

Despite the risks all officers and men who go into submarines are volunteers. And there are always many more candidates than vacancies.

Stiff test

AN officer or man who is accepted for entry to submarines must go through a very strict medical test called PULHEMS. This stands for physical fitness.

by

author of wartime best seller "SUB-LIEUTENANT," and the son of the late Captain Edward Kennedy, of the RAWALPINDI. Kennedy is now writing a history of Nelson's captains.

upper limbs, locomotion, hearing, eyesight, mental capacity, and emotional stability—the last two being almost the most important of the lot.

On passing this test the volunteer goes to HMS Dolphin, at Fort Blockhouse, Gosport, the headquarters of Submarine Command, for a four months' course covering all departments of a submarine.

During this course he must test out the escape apparatus—an exact replica of that used by a submarine crew stranded on the bottom—from the foot of a huge indoor tank. At the end of the course he is appointed to a sea-going submarine to complete his training.

Among the volunteers there are occasionally one or two who feel they will not be able to stand the strain of submarine life.

They are given every encouragement to ask to be transferred before they find themselves in a position where their mess-mates' lives depend on them; they are then sent back to general service without any discredit to them.

Thus—like the Spartans—it is only the fittest who survive.

The submarine flotillas are a part of the Fleet, and yet they are apart from it. They carry out the same exercises and regular peace-time duties—showing touch. Others, who are transferred to battleships or other ships of the Fleet, find the wrench harder.

Nervous strain

THE life itself is a hard one. Not even the toughest submarine is immune to the psychological strain of diving and surfacing, and remaining for hours two or three hundred feet below the surface of the sea. There is probably no job in the world which calls for sounder nerves, better judgment, a more balanced temperament.

This exceptional temperament, combined with a natural love of the sea, has made the men of the British submarines one of the most formidable fighting forces of this century.

You have to understand the loneliness of the ocean before you can also understand not the fears which submarine men have—but the kind of troubled delight.

Except for the Germans, who overcame their natural ineptitude for the sea by a formidable technical efficiency and remarkable physical courage, this attribute belongs to no other nation. The Japanese never had it. Nor have the Russians.

Courage

THE invincible spirit of the submarine service may perhaps be epitomised in this wartime story.

Towards the end of the war, at a period when our losses in submarines had been particularly heavy, a boat was returning from patrol across the North Sea. She had been badly damaged by a mine off the German coast and was unable to dive.

A British aircraft on patrol, not expecting to meet her, took her to be a U-boat and started a bombing attack.

Despite frenzied signals from the submarine, the attack continued. While it was at its height the captain of the submarine sent a radio message to his base: "Expected time of arrival 1400 IF friendly aircraft stops bombing me."

Courage takes many disguises. None knows it better than the men of the submarine service.

CAN IT BE PEACE IN OUR TIME?

From 50 years of chaos comes 'measured hope'

By JAMES CAMERON

One of the few Britons ever to have seen an atom bomb explode.

ONE day sticks in my mind: a day in June 1946 which did not exist. That day, in mid-Pacific, we crossed the Date Line; we lay down on Monday, and when we rose it was Wednesday. Tuesday disappeared, presumably for ever.

It chanced to be my birthday—a transcendental thing, to lose a birthday, not difficult to symbolise. Six days later I waited outside Bikini for the atom bomb; the noise was less horrid, fying than that of the few people who later began to laugh at it.

Today one hesitates to talk of it—an odd world, when one can so soon become an atom-bomb bore.

So the last years of half a century pointed the climax of all that had gone before.

Beginning when?

Who is to say when that climax occurred—in 1919, when Rutherford demonstrated that the atom was in fact "not a brick but a box"?

In 1941, when Mr Churchill put atomic research on the Chief of Staff's priority, the "Tube Alloys" day?

In 1942, when Manhattan Project was born? In July 1943, when Number One lit up New Mexico? On August 6 at Hiroshima?

Or September of last year, when someone heard a rumble around the Urals, and realised that no nation can corner every aspect of fear for ever?

We call this the Atomic Age with a kind of regardless despair, tinged with cynicism. If as I believe, the big bangs are about to cancel each other out, then we can look back on our Fifty Glorious Years and say: At least we can improve on that.

They began in the throes of the Boer War—the first of the dirty wars. From that point on the whole performance lost every pretension to glamour and quality, romance, or glory. It became, as everyone who had anything to do with it knows, squalid and ignoble, useless.

Yet it went on. It went on in 1914. After that the land fit for heroes watched, with passing disgust or indignation the same dismal folly in China, Ethiopia, Spain, differing from each other only in degrees of expertise.

Today the victors, debtors to the Allies, godfathers to the vanquished, see themselves being hurled to the brink of an even more lunatic ruin by a couple of muscle-bound big brothers, each neurotic and fearful, because of the existence of the other.

The brighter side

I spend much of my time looking on this curious scene from the remotest sidelines. They tend to be hotter in climate, cooler in temper. I have even been deluded far away from the newspapers, that even the twentieth-century world had moments of tranquillity, and remembrance and the impulse to good will.

In these moments I am apt to think less of Hiroshima and more of Hampstead Heath, to reflect that our clumsy species may throw up Hitler and Hahls, but that someone or other kept such fights from becoming wars, as in another generation they almost surely would have done.

Fifty-fifty

I hold a goodish view of the 50s.

At least we know what we are up against. Now that both the Big Boys hold the Ace of Clubs—of which we saw some faint fore-shadow at Bikini—the chances of nobody touching it off are, in my view, immensely improved.

Moreover the chances of both sides doing what they basically want to do—hand over the responsibility—are better.

Literally, retiring chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, knew that the American proposition for control, the Baruch Plan, was too tough for the Russians; already he hints at a new plan under discussion, which, because no one has yet thought up the jargon to denounce it, may suddenly be accepted.

Even that may not mean more than words on paper, but who are we, adrift in the twentieth-century to thrust away straw?

People are all right: the trouble is Peoples. Ever since the days of that old German Kant, wise men have watched the contrast between the rule of law between man and man, and the anarchy between Sovereign States and Sovereign States.

This is only 1950. We have not evolved far yet. One day we shall.

Alger Hiss is used to flay a memory

By C. V. R. THOMPSON

NEW YORK. THE men who still hate F.D.R. are preparing today for a new attack upon his memory.

Their ammunition is the "guilty" verdict in the second trial for perjury of Alger Hiss. The Roosevelt haters' doctrine is that Roosevelt and the New Dealers who gathered around him were a bunch of Communists more loyal to Russia than to America.

Alger Hiss was a typical New Dealer—brilliant and Leftish. And it happened that his work brought him, at least physically, close to F.D.R. in the last stages of the war.

He was an adviser to Roosevelt at Yalta, and he was one of the U.S. architects of U.N.C.O. So all that the professional Roosevelt haters needed was the verdict, which called Hiss a liar for denying that he was once an agent of a Communist spy ring in Washington.

They are hinting that the end of the sensational Hiss trial is not the end of the story. Promises are made that there will be additional "information."

Say Republican Congressman Richard Nixon: "This will show that high officials in two Administrations deliberately kept information about the Hiss conspiracy from the public."

One of the Administrations is, of course, Roosevelt's. President Truman, who once dismissed the Hiss investigation as a "red herring," will also come into it. Says Congressman Harold Velde: "President Truman's red herring is cooked by the verdict, and I hope he enjoys eating it."

OPINION: Commenting on the disclosure that the British Government spent more than £3,000,000 on Information Services in the past year, columnist Louis Sobol says: "Imagine spending 9,000,000 bucks just to let Uncle Sam know that England is broke."

Bidault Appeals To Socialists

Paris, Feb. 7.—M. Georges Bidault, the French Prime Minister, today appealed to the French Socialists to support from the outside his new Government—the first since the war without Socialist participation.

"My programme has not changed," he said in his policy statement before the National Assembly, following the reshuffle of his Government last night.

"The Government hopes for the support of those who no longer share the responsibility of power," he said.

"The Government appeals for support to those who have already supported it at a time when it must face external and internal danger."

"The causes of peace, of order and of social justice are indissolubly linked."

AN UPROAR

M. Bidault was warmly applauded by his own Party, the Popular Republicans, and at all by the Socialists.

An uproar broke out in the debate which followed M. Bidault's statement when M. Jacques Duclos, chairman of the Communist group in the Assembly, said that the Socialist ex-Minister of Defence, M. Paul Ramadier, was involved in the "affaire des Generaux".

M. Duclos referred to General Georges Xevenne, former Chief of Staff, and Charles Mord, former head of the National Defence College, both now out of service pending the findings of a Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry on charges of intervention in French Indo-China policy.

M. Duclos alleged that M. Ramadier, when Minister of the Interior, "had the judicial inquiry dropped." Reuter.

HE SPIED TO GET A VISA

Szczecin, Poland, Feb. 7.—Easton Druet, 46-year-old Frenchman, told a Polish military court here today that he became a French spy in Poland for two and a half years after the war to gain a French visa for his German fiancée.

Druet, who has been charged along with Andre Robineau, 23-year-old French, communist official and four Poles with spying for France in Poland and preparing for France in Poland and preparing for France in Poland.

When the trial opened yesterday in this East Prussian town, Druet admitted that he had had a French spy network recruited from among Poles disaffected with the present Communist Government.

Druet and the four Poles are accused of being section leaders of Robineau's network, which was trained to collect information on ports, shipping, armaments, military units and their armaments as well as political and social data.

Druet, a handsome middle-aged Frenchman, spoke firmly, but appeared subdued after Robineau's dashing appearance yesterday.—Reuter.

Leslie Henson Gets Part

London, Feb. 7.—Leslie Henson, veteran British comedian, will get the part in "Harvey" that Joe E. Brown could not take.

An announcement from the Prince of Wales Theatre said that Henson, 58, is rehearsing for the role of Elwood P. Dowd and will step into it on Monday.

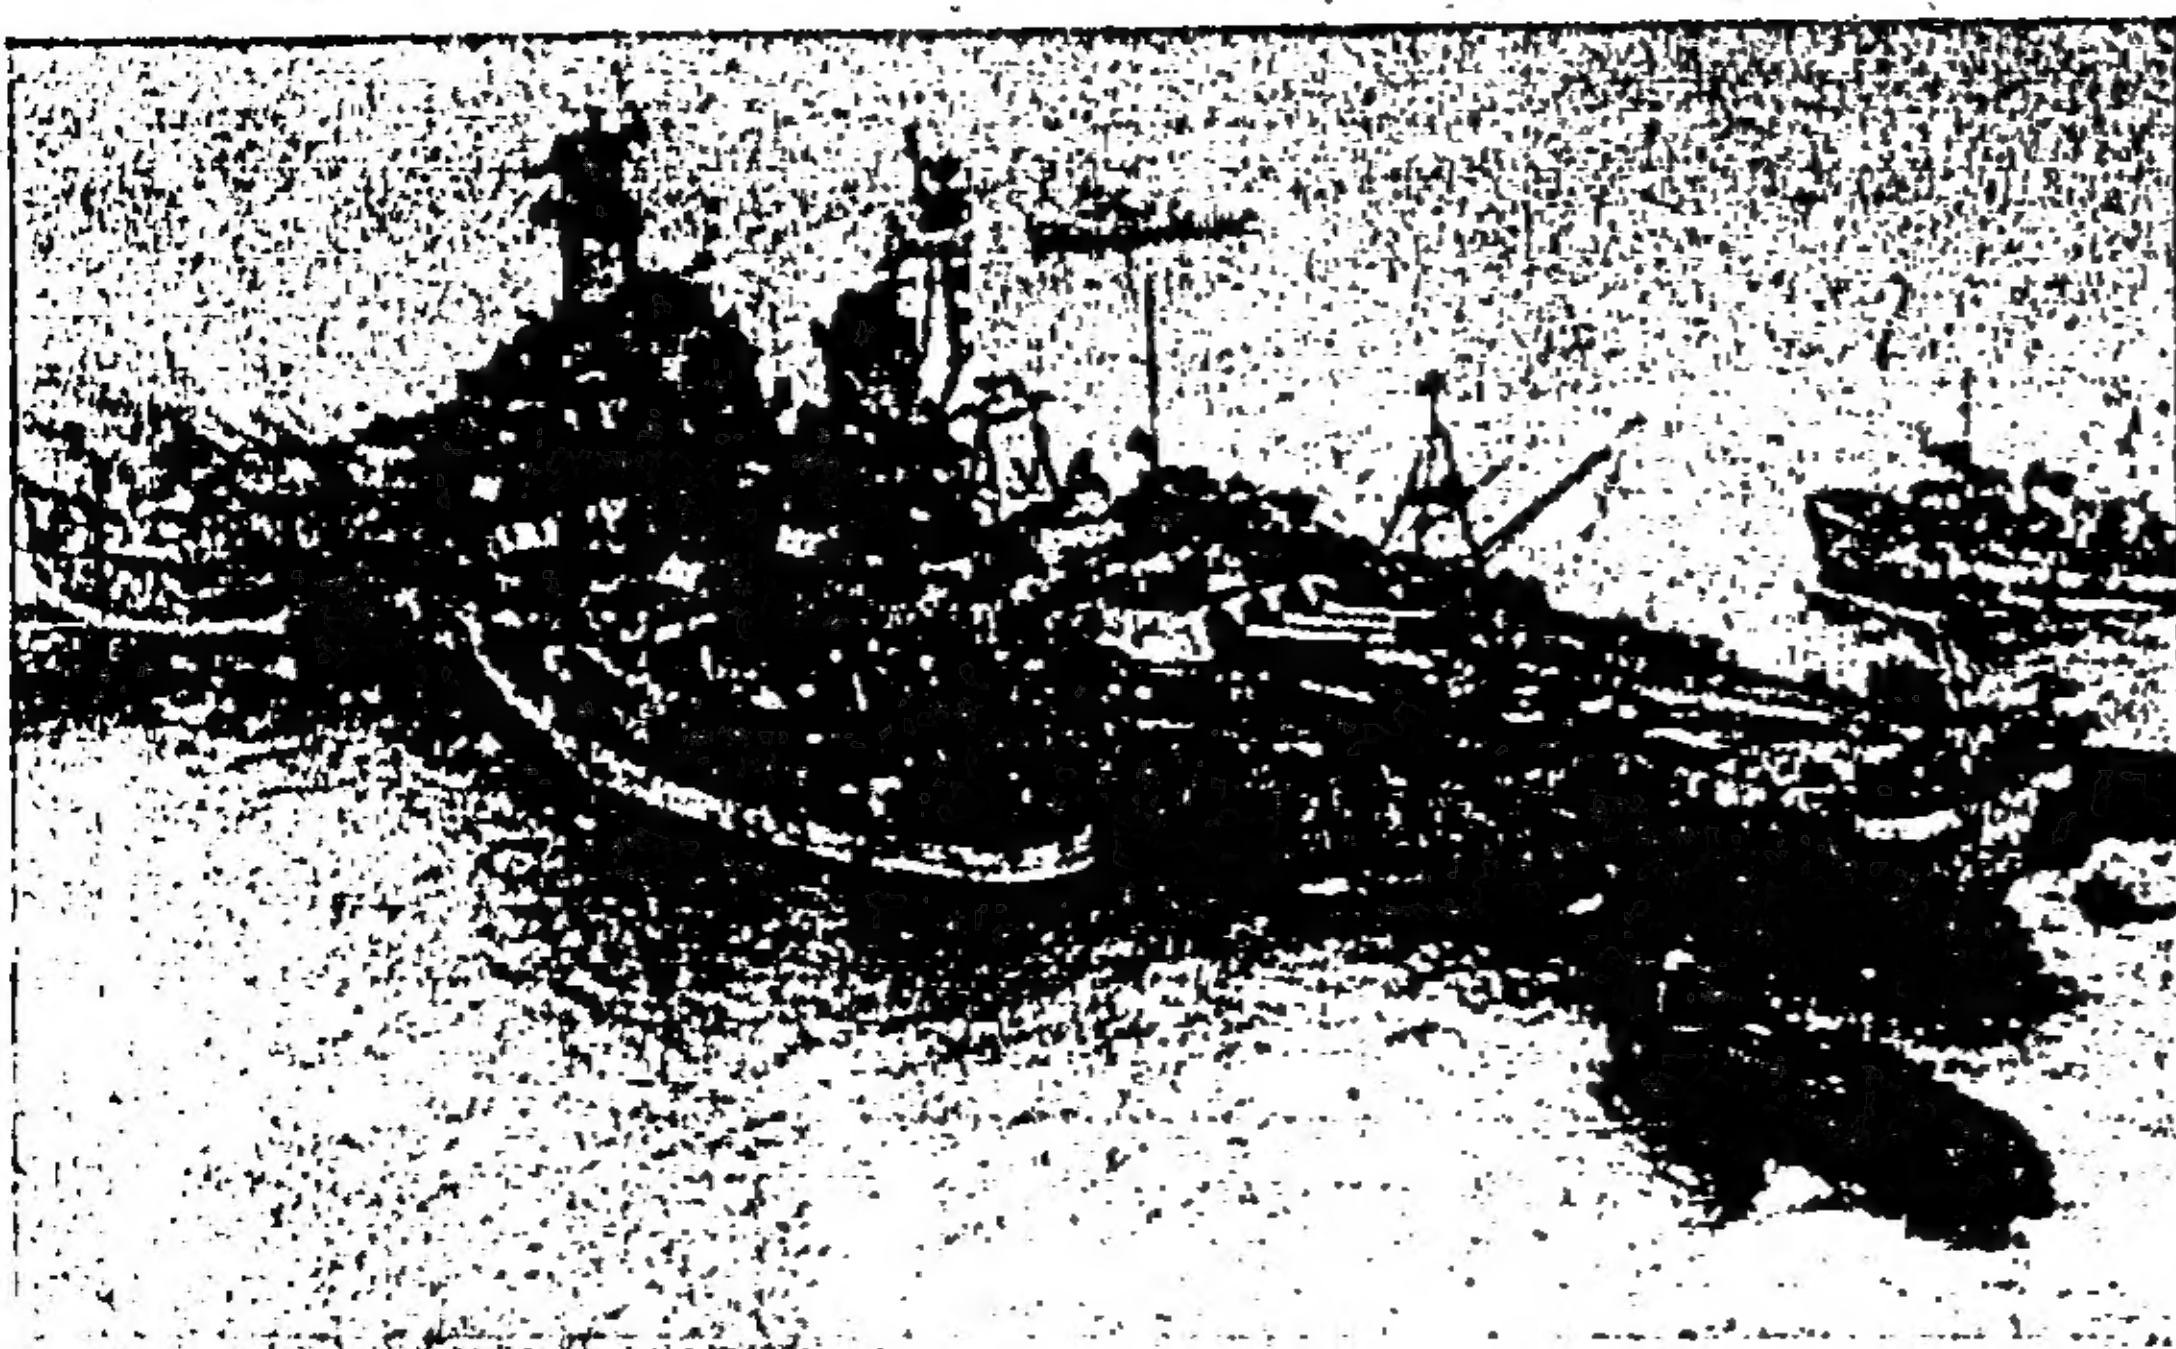

Sid Field, who had been playing Dowd, died on Friday at 43, and an under-study temporarily took over.

In Toledo, Brown said he had been offered the part but had other engagements. He played it for 10 weeks last year while Field was ill.—Associated Press.

Pakistan Accused Of Kashmir Aggression

Lake Success, Feb. 7.—India today accused Pakistan of "naked aggression" in Kashmir and rejected plans for a settlement of the two-year-old dispute between the Dominions. The "peace" proposals were put to the United Nations Security Council by General A. G. L. MacNaughton, of Canada, who reported today that he did not believe that anything more he did would serve any useful purpose.

BERGMAN BABY NOT ILL

Rome, Feb. 7.—Ingrid Bergman's doctor said tonight that she and her baby will leave the hospital on Sunday or Monday.

Dr. Pier Luigi Giordano denied a report in a Rome evening paper that the five-day-old boy is so ill that he has been placed in an incubator.

He said that the child is fine, but there is nothing seriously wrong with him. Miss Bergman will return to her Rome apartment when she leaves the hospital, the doctor said.

A doctor of Roberto Rossellini, Italian film director who has been living in the hospital since the child was born, also denied the serious illness report.

She said the baby will probably not be baptised until after the Bergmans leave the hospital.

The Swedish actress has received word from her husband, Hollywood director Peter Bergman, since the birth of the child. Rossellini's sister said.

Miss Bergman is waiting for a Mexican divorce in order to marry Rossellini, Associated Press.

HISTORIC PLATE

San Francisco, Feb. 7.—A historic bronze plate dating back to the year 816 B.C. has been donated to the Chinese Communist Government, the Peking Radio reported.

The 600-pound plate, inscribed with citations for military achievements, was presented originally by an Emperor of the Chou Dynasty to one of his feudal warlords. It bears the date of the 12th year of the Chou Dynasty, which corresponds to the year 816 B.C.

The plate at one time served as a trough for watering horses, was discovered in Shensi Province several hundred years ago, and came into the possession of warlord Liu Ming-chuan.

The present owner, Liu Su-tsun, has offered to present it to the Communist Government, the broadcast said.—United Press.

TOPSY-TURVY WORLD

He asked the Council to study the latest, each succeeding debacle and added: "And yet, in this topsy-turvy world, it is India that is constantly accused of starting in delaying the debate."

Three weeks ago, Sir Mohammad Zafarullah Khan, Pakistan Foreign Minister, told General MacNaughton that his Government thought that India's amendments to the "peace" plan proposals were "a clear rejection of your proposals."

The dispute between the two Dominions flared up in October 1947, when the Maharajah of Kashmir, Hindu ruler of a predominantly Moslem people, acceded to India.

Pakistan, in its reply dated December 28, communicated "acceptance" of the proposals "subject to amendments" which, it claimed, "were suggested to bring out more clearly the objective you (General MacNaughton) have in view."

Pakistan suggested seven amendments in all, on three of which (when the amendments were later compared between India and Pakistan) India "reserved its position" while rejecting all except one of the remaining.

By one amendment, Pakistan agreed to give unconditional assurance to curb any future tribal incursions into Jammu and Kashmir but not to the Government of India as had been suggested by the MacNaughton proposals. The amendment did not say to whom the assurance was to be given.

Another Pakistan amendment wanted it clarified that the resolution of the Kashmir question should be "in accord with the UNCIP resolutions of August 13, 1948 and January 5, 1949" by the addition of the last mentioned clause.

INDIA'S WISHES were mainly these:

1. The "disbandment or disarmament of the Azad Kashmir forces" be placed on the same footing as the withdrawal of the regular and "irregular" forces of Pakistan, and the reference in the MacNaughton proposals to the "armed forces and militia of the State of Kashmir" be omitted.

2. That, in so far as the northern areas were concerned, the responsibility for their "defence" shall vest in the Government of India and responsibility for their "administration" shall

CONTRIVERSIAL ISSUES

He gave as his reason, "a perusal of the so-called (Indian) amendments, which amount to a clear rejection of your proposals and seek to substitute in their place a scheme wholly incompatible with them."

In the concluding part of his report, General MacNaughton said: "In the absence of clear evidence that further mediation by me would seem likely to assist the Governments of India and Pakistan toward an agreed course of action, I do not believe that further activity on my part would serve any useful purpose."

"It is my view that the further procedure to settle this dispute should be determined by the Security Council."

General MacNaughton explained that his proposal had been inspired by two main considerations, namely, that any measure of agreement already achieved between India and Pakistan should not be discarded and, secondly, that he should concentrate on appropriate arrangements for the future rather than pronounce judgment on the controversial issues of the dispute.—Reuter.

AGREEMENT ON REFERENDUM

Madras, Feb. 7.—Agreement has been reached between France and India to hold a referendum in four French South India towns, George J. Chamberlain, French India Settlements Commissioner, said today.

He would not explain further and would not commit himself beyond indicating that "some general observers will be in the settlements." When, he did not say.

Chamberlain returned today from Paris, where he had been recalled for consultations.—Associated Press.

BERLIN TRAFFIC HOLD-UP EASED

Frankfurt, Feb. 7.—A new traffic hold-up, created on both sides of the British-Russian zonal border by intensified East German (Soviet controlled) scrutiny early today, had greatly eased by tonight.

Guards, who had slowed down passage at the Helmstedt check point so that at one stage this morning 160 West-bound and 50 East-bound lorries awaited clearance, were allowing them through faster. Late this afternoon only 30 were lined up for the West and 25 for the East.

In one hour before noon the East German police had passed only 14 Berlin-bound lorries.

A British spokesman in Berlin said it was "premature at the moment" to say that a new Soviet blockade was being imposed.

Frankfurt official quarters also expressedly soft on the Western German action in cutting iron and steel deliveries to the Soviet Zone though an official diplomatic quarter hailed it as the start of a counter-blockade.

In London, the spokesman of the Foreign Office said that the decision was taken by the Allied High Commission in Germany, but he would not agree with the interpretation of the move as "a counter measure against the Soviet slow-down of traffic between Berlin and the West."

SEPARATE MATTER

The British Government, he said, was "watching closely" the question of interference with Berlin's communications, but as a "separate matter."

In Bonn, the West German Chancellor, Dr. Konrad Adenauer, said that West German steel deliveries to the Soviet Zone had been halted because the Soviet Zone authorities were "holding" with their deliveries to Western Germany under the one year international trade pact which expires this summer.

Simultaneously with the Foreign Office statement in London, British officials in Germany denied that the measure had been adopted in consultation with the Allied High Commission, and said it was a "purely West German Government move."

EXCHANGE OF FOOD

They also discussed the possibility of foreign investment in West German industry and, according to a communiqué tonight, "a number of other economic matters, particularly related to the development of the Marshall Plan in Germany and the entry of Germany into further international organisations, including the Council of Europe."

The East German news agency, ADN, declared that the ban of steel to the East was imposed "on direct instructions" from Mr. McCloy.

Any forbidding steel deliveries, the Anglo-Americans want to hit the internal German exchange of food which is now getting under way and make it illusory," it added.

United States officials denied, however, that the Allies were responsible for the move.—Reuter.
